Golden Seamstress (no date)

Not site has been found yet, but multiple people are looking. Her Excellency will be looking at a site in Norwich in the near future.

Site requirements: At least 1 large room, and another smaller room (for sleeping contestants), as well as space for changing. A small kitchen is nice but not required. Price range: ideally not more than $200, as that's what the event generally brings in.

Artifacts of a Life IV – 2/8/2020

- Baron Jehan will once again be an unofficial co-autocrat and will begin work shortly on recruiting judges. Elizabeth is working on thank you gifts for the judges.
- Master Peregrine has agreed to run the tabulation process, which is a big part of the behind the scenes work.
- We would like to give prizes of raw materials – contact Elizabeth with any questions regarding suitability. We have previously discussed a budget of $50 for prizes, which Elizabeth would like to use towards the cost of the wood chests that Eloise and Dorian usually build.

Food Safety Kitchen Equipment

Severin attended a class at Pennsic on food safety and noted several things which he thinks we should add to the kitchen supplies: 1) thermometers with wire attached to digital monitor; 2) disposable gloves in multiple sizes; 3) long handled teaspoons for tasting. Severin presented his proposal. Due to time issues, further discussion put off until November

Thrown Weapons Event

Matteo would like to run a decathlon-themed thrown weapons event. He doesn't have a site yet, and would like help finding one. Requirements are: Big field (100' x 100'). Kitchen not required, but bathrooms are needed. Parking: For no more than 50 attendees if event is TW only. He's willing to include other activities, but site requirements may change as a result.

As Matteo has never run an event, he's also looking for help/guidance. He's happy to do the work, but doesn't know everything that needs to be considered and/or done.

10/29/19 - WAS MEDIEVAL TAPESTRY CUSTOM MADE FOR BAYEUX CATHEDRAL? - YORK, ENGLAND

—Art historian Christopher Norton of the University of York has suggested that the Bayeux Tapestry was commissioned within a few years of the Norman conquest of England in A.D. 1066 to hang in France's Bayeux Cathedral, according to a Live Science report. Images on the artwork, which is thought to have been commissioned by Bishop Odo, a half-brother of William the Conqueror, and stitched by women in England, depict the exploits of the first Norman king of England and his victory at the Battle of Hastings. Norton examined documentary evidence, surviving architectural details of the church, published data on the tapestry's measurements, and information on medieval cloth sizes. He says the physical and narrative structure of the 230-foot-long tapestry's embroidered linen strips are perfectly adapted to the north, south, and west sides of the cathedral's main, central section, allowing for the church's choir screen, doorways, and architectural supports, and shrinkage and missing sections of the tapestry. The tapestry first appeared in the Bayeux Cathedral's inventory in 1476. 10/25/19 - MEDIEVAL SCOTSMAN'S FACE RECONSTRUCTED - ABERDEEN, SCOTLAND—BBC News reports that researchers from AOC Archaeology Group have reconstructed the face of a man whose 600-year-old remains were uncovered during a construction project in northeastern Scotland's city of Aberdeen. Examination of his bones revealed he was over the age of 46 at the time of death, stood shorter than most men of the time period, and suffered from extensive dental disease. The chemical composition of his bones suggests he grew up in Scotland's northwest Highlands, or on one of the Outer Hebrides islands. For more on facial reconstruction, go to "Neolithic FaceTime." <https://www.bbc.com/news/uk-scotland-north-east-orkney-shetland-50138379>

10/24/19 - MEDIEVAL BURIALS UNCOVERED IN CENTRAL ROME - ROME, ITALY—Wanted in Rome reports that medieval burials were unearthed during utility work on the Via del Governo Vecchio in central Rome. The graves had been damaged by previous construction projects. The first burial contained the remains of a 25- to 30-year-old woman, and a 30- to 40-year-old man. The woman was buried with a shell in her hand. A bronze coin dating to the late eleventh or early twelfth century and shell fragments were also found in the grave. The second burial site consists of several graves set against a brick wall thought to be associated with the Church of St. Cecilia at Monte Giordano, which was built in A.D. 1123 and demolished in the early seventeenth century. Scallop shells with drilled holes found in these graves were typically worn as necklaces by pilgrims, suggesting that Christians who died while making a pilgrimage to St. Peter's Basilica may have been buried here. To read about the grave of a presumed outlaw in eleventh-century Sicily, go to "Stabbed in the Back."

10/22/19 - NEW THOUGHTS ON OSLO'S MEDIEVAL WATERFRONT - OSLO, NORWAY—Life in Norway reports that massive timbers and stone foundations from Oslo's medieval waterfront have been uncovered at the head of the Oslo fjord. Scientists including Håvard Hegdal of the Norwegian Institute for Cultural Heritage Research (NIKU) dated the timber to the summer of A.D. 1420. The stonework may have served as building foundations, or as walkways described in medieval sources for watchmen to patrol the city and the port's jetties, Hegdal said. Timber quay structures have also been found some 300 feet to the north, he added, suggesting the quay at the port of Oslo was larger than had been previously thought. The newly uncovered landing area, however, is larger and better built, leading Hegdal to speculate that the area might have once been one of higher status. The researchers are creating 3-D models of the waterfront area as they continue to excavate the remains of ships and piers. 10/9/19 - VIKING COIN HOARDS UNCOVERED IN ESTONIA - KURESSAARE, ESTONIA—ERR News reports that two hoards of silver coins dating to the Viking era have been discovered on the island of Saaremaa. The first hoard dates to the latter half of the tenth century A.D., and is thought to have been carried to Saaremaa's southern coast from the island of Gotland, which is also located in the Baltic Sea. The second hoard, found in western Saaremaa, also dates to the late eleventh century. Mauri Kiudsoo of Tallinn University said the caches of coins reflect the upheaval in the region at the time. Few coin hoards from the late eleventh century have been found in other parts of Estonia, he added. For more, go to "Hoards of the Vikings." <https://news.err.ee/988737/another-saaremaa-archaeological-haul-includes-viking-era-silver-coins>

10/4/19 - FIFTEENTH-CENTURY ORNAMENT RETURNED TO OLD CAIRO MOSQUE - CAIRO, EGYPT—Ahram Online reports that a copper ornament stolen from the fifteenth-century Al-Kady Abdel-Baset mosque in 2014 has been recovered and returned to the mosque's main door. Police tracked the artifact through the use of surveillance camera footage, according to Gamal Mustafa, head of the Islamic, Coptic and Jewish Antiquities Department of Egypt's Ministry of Antiquities.

Objects taken from other mosques in Cairo were also found in the suspect's possession. To read about Heliopolis, once the most sacred site on the Nile, go to "Egypt's Eternal City."

10/3/19 - BLACK DEATH BACTERIA MAY HAVE ORIGINATED IN RUSSIA - JENA, GERMANY—Science Magazine reports that researchers led by Maria Spyrou of the Max Planck Institute for the Science of Human History analyzed the genomes of 34 samples of Y. pestis, the bacteria that caused the Black Death, obtained from the teeth of people buried at ten different European sites between the fourteenth and seventeenth centuries. The study suggests that the oldest bacteria DNA came from Laishevo, a town in Russia's southwestern Volga region, and that this strain is ancestral to the strains in the remaining samples, although it may have originated somewhere else in western Asia. Once it arrived in Europe, Y. pestis is likely to have lived on local rodent hosts, where it evolved, diversified, and caused later outbreaks of the Black Death. Additional samples of the bacteria from western Asia could offer more information about the spread of the disease, Spyrou explained. For more, go to "Bronze Age Plague," one of ARCHAEOLOGY's Top 10 Discoveries of 2018.

10/2/19 - ELIZABETHAN-ERA THEATER SITE EXCAVATED IN LONDON - LONDON, ENGLAND—According to a report in The East London Advertiser, a team of researchers from the Museum of London Archaeology (MOLA) is investigating the site of the Boar's Head Playhouse in the Whitechapel district of East London. Historic records show that rowdy plays were performed in open-air spaces at the inn, which was owned by Oliver Woodliffe, as early as 1557. Woodliffe added tiered galleries, a 360-degree stage, and a central yard to the inn complex in 1598, and a roof over the stage and additional galleries a year later. Acting troupes including the Lord Derby's Men, the Lord Worcester's Men, and the Queen's Men all performed on the Boar's Head stage. Any surviving remnants of the theater will be featured in the student housing and community performance space planned for construction on the site. To read about excavations at one of London's earliest Elizabethan theaters, go to "Behind the Curtain."

10/1/19 - VIKING SWORD PARTS RECOVERED IN ESTONIA - TALLINN, ESTONIA—ERR News reports that pieces of some 100 Viking swords and spearheads dating to the middle of the tenth century A.D. were found in two caches placed about 260 feet apart along a remote Viking trade route near Estonia's northwestern coast. Archaeologist Mauri Kiudsoo of Tallinn University said the bits of broken weapons may have been cenotaphs, or items left as a monument to warriors who had died and were buried somewhere else. The surviving sword parts provide enough information, however, to know the weapons included H-shaped double-edged swords. Eight nearly intact type H swords and fragments of 100 more have been found in Estonia alone, Kiudsoo explained. Most of those artifacts have been found along the country's northern coast, he added. For more, go to "The First Vikings."
