Monthly Newsletter of Barony Beyond the Mountain

October, 2017 AS52

Greetings unto the Barony Beyond the Mountain from Eloise,

Another Artifacts of a Life is in the books. As we anticipated, it was a small event, but everyone appears to have had great fun. The caliber of the entrants was amazing - Dorigen and I had a very difficult time choosing an entrant to honor, and we came home inspired for our own projects. Artifacts, while very small, and very much a niche event, is rapidly becoming a prestigious event in the East, and the Barony should be proud of what we're building here. And of course, thank yous are in order to everyone who worked to make it happen. Particularly though, I would like to express my appreciation for Mistress Elizabeth Vynehorn, who does all the heavy lifting of making it happen; Master Jehan de Lac who recruits and organizes all the judges ahead of time; Master Peregrine the Illuminator who not only makes all the judging happen smoothly (I swear it's some form of black magic,) but also tolerates the fact that whenever I see him I lean on him to come teach me remedial weaving again; Lady Leandra who always runs our gate; and Lady Sisuile who provided us with a tasty day board - under budget! I'm looking forward to Artifacts IV in 2019.

And so the seasons turn, autumn is in the air, and it's time to think of Yule. Yule requires far more staffing and effort - please consider volunteering! No effort is too small. If you can offer even a little time, please contact Mistress Ciara or Lord Mark, who are stewarding the event. Also, if you have any idea of staying for feast, I suggest that you pre-register. NOW. I anticipate that feast will sell out quickly, and unless there is a significant increase in kitchen and cleanup staff - on Friday AND Saturday, don't expect to see any increase in how many we are seating. The menu might be familiar to you: I asked Mistress Elizabeth for a significant personal favor, and for my last Yule as Baroness, she is making me the feast that I would have chosen for my Investiture had I had the option: the Simple Fare menu. I am fortunate in my friends.

As always, Dorigen and I are eager to recognize the members of our Barony who do good things - and likewise the people from without our Barony who do good things for us. Please bring those people to our attention by sending us recommendations! The Baronial Order of Precedence is available on our website, and will shortly be up to date as of Artifacts. Check and see who is missing, and then send me an email about it. Otherwise I'm going to make up more things. Last week it was a ferry - who knows what could be next?

8/30/17 - 9/26/17 - VIKING-ERA WEAVER'S SWORD DISCOVERED IN IRELAND - CORK CITY, IRELAND—A wooden weaver's sword has been discovered in southern Ireland, according to a report in RTE News. The tool, carved from yew, measures nearly 12 inches long and is decorated with carved human faces in the Viking style. Archaeologist Maurice Hurley said the sword dates to the eleventh century, and was found among 19 Viking-era houses with central hearths. "The sword was used probably by women, to hammer threads into place on a loom," Hurley explained. "The pointed end is for picking up the threads for patternmaking." A wooden thread-winder decorated with carved horse heads was also recovered. For more, go to "The Vikings in Ireland." https://www.rte.ie/news/munster/2017/0926/907642

9/20/17 - POSSIBLE VIKING BOAT BURIAL UNCOVERED IN NORWAY - TRONDHEIM.

NORWAY—According to a report in Live Science, a possible boat burial dating to between the seventh and tenth centuries A.D. has been discovered in a market square in Trondheim. The burial, which may have at one time been covered with a mound, was damaged by later construction. Ian Reed of the Norwegian Institute for Cultural Heritage said nails and lumps of rust are all that remain of what could have been a flat-bottomed. wooden boat built to travel the shallow waters of the Nidelven River. Two long bones were found in the boat, but they were not well preserved. DNA tests may be able to determine whether the bones came from a human. A piece of bronze, part of a spoon, and the remains of a key that would have opened a chest were also found in the grave. 9/19/17 - PORPOISE BONES UNEARTHED AT MEDIEVAL MONKS' RETREAT - GUERNSEY. CHANNEL ISLANDS—The remains of a porpoise have been unearthed at the site of a medieval religious retreat on the island of Chapelle Dom Hue, according to a report in The Guardian. Archaeologists expected the carefully dug grave to contain human bones, and were surprised to find a porpoise skull and other body parts. "If they had eaten it or killed it for the blubber, why take the trouble to bury it?" asked States of Guernsey archaeologist Philip de Jersey. He suggests that the body could have been salted and kept in the hole as a way to preserve it. The bones will be studied by a marine scientist. 9/12/17 - VIKING SWORD FOUND ON MOUNTAIN IN NORWAY - OPPLAND,

NORWAY—Fox News reports that a well-preserved Viking sword made of high-quality iron was discovered by reindeer hunters at an elevation of 5,381 feet on a mountain in southern Norway. Archaeologist Lars Pilø of Oppland County Council said the cold, dry conditions on the mountain helped to preserve the sword, which had been resting among small loose stones with its blade sticking out. During the winters, the sword would have been covered with snow and ice. The archaeologists and hunters returned to the site with a metal detector, but did not find any additional artifacts. They think the weapon may have been lost some 1,100 years ago by a Viking crossing the rough terrain during a blizzard. For more, go to "Hoards of the Vikings."

9/11/17 - MEDIEVAL VILLAGE DISCOVERED IN DENMARK - AARHUS, DENMARK—Traces of a small, agricultural village dating to the medieval period have been unearthed in central Jutland. according to a report in The Copenhagen Post. Records of Hovedstrup date back to 1300, but the village is thought to have been founded even earlier. Moesgaard Museum archaeologists have uncovered a road paved with stones and three homes marked by their post holes. Hovedstrup was abandoned in the late 1600s, during a time when many landlords rearranged their holdings to create new farms or hunting grounds. 9/8/17 - REMAINS FROM VIKING WARRIOR'S GRAVE IDENTIFIED AS FEMALE -

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN—DNA testing has revealed that a warrior's grave discovered in the Viking-era town of Birka in the late nineteenth century contained the remains of a woman. Charlotte Hedenstierna-Jonson of Uppsala University told The Local that the woman stood about five feet, seven inches tall, and was over the age of 30 at the time of her death. She was buried with weapons, including a sword, an ax, a spear, armor-piercing arrows, a battle knife, shields, and two horses. She also had a board game, thought to have been used to try out battle tactics and strategies, in her lap. "She's most likely planned, led, and taken part in battles," Hedenstierna-Jonson said. The DNA testing of the bones was done after osteologist Anna Kjellström of Stockholm University noticed that the skull's cheekbones were finer and thinner than usually found on a man's skull, and that the hip bones were also feminine. "It was probably quite unusual ffor a woman to be a military leader], but in this case, it probably had more to do with her role in society and the family she was from, and that carrying more importance than her gender," speculated Hedenstierna-Johnson. 9/7/17 - YOUNG CHILD'S BURIAL UNEARTHED IN SIBERIA - TYUMEN, RUSSIA—The Siberian Times reports that a team of researchers led by Alexander Tkachev of the Museum of Archaeology and Ethnography of Tyumen State University discovered the grave of a young Sikhirtya child among nine possible burials, surrounded by a small moat, on a high point on the Tazovsky peninsula. The child is thought to have been three or four years old at the time of death, which occurred in the late fifteenth or early sixteenth centuries. The body had been placed on pieces of birch bark that had been sewn together, and was buried with two iron had been placed on pieces of birch bark that had been sewn together, and was buried with two iron knives and an arrowhead. The child wore an impressive hat made of pieces of fur lined with woolen cloth. Bronze decorations had also been sewn into it. Reindeer bones at the child's feet suggest that a meal of roasted venison, possibly cooked on mounds in the necropolis, was also provided for the afterlife. "The burial was unusually rich for such a little child," Tkachev said. "In fact, we were rather taken aback." For more, go to "Siberian William Tell."

Artifacts for a Life

Lady Tola knitýr was a 14th century Swiss noblewoman. She made two knitted purses, likely to be used as reliquary bags in her church.

Lord Bartholomew of Northampton was an archer on board the Mary Rose when it sank.

Lady Elaine Howys of Morningthorpe, widow, left the contents of her broider shop to her son-in-law and daughter.

Lord Brendan Firebow's display was of various items found on his person at the time of his untimely death (possibly in a duel) in the late 1500's.

Baroness Ysabella de Draguignan's artifacts were discovered in an old box found under broken floorboards. It contained a few playing cards, a pewter token, a padlock key, a fire-damaged pendant, a toy horse, a gravoir (a hair parting tool), and several handwritten notes and letters — items that would have been lovingly treasured by her 14th century persona.

Lady Rosamund von Schwyz presented the tools and technique of bobbin lace.

Lady Aibhilin inghean Ui Phaidin presented glass bead jewelry as found in the Deer Park Farms Settlement site in County Antrim Ireland

The following were not entered into the competitions but were on display:

Congratulations to the following gentles who received awards at Artifacts for a Life:

Lord Mark the Red Hand: Defender of the White Oak

Baron Angus Gove McKinnon: Companion of the White Oak

Charlotte: Rank of archer
